

Harry's mom wins 'West Midlands Woman of the Year'

Harry's mom was recently nominated for City and Styles 'Woman of the Year Awards' due to her efforts in turning her son's Campaign HelpHarryHelpOthers into a registered Charity following his passing in 2011.

Georgie Moseley who founded the charity after Harry lost his battle to a brain tumour in 2011 has worked tirelessly to not only form a charity that supports families every step of the way through their journey but also created various children's initiatives to continue to inspire young people through Harry's story.

In just over twelve months the charity has formed 3 funds HelpCure (funding research), HelpCope (providing financial grants to families suffering from financial hardship as a result of a Cancer Diagnosis) and HelpCare (providing grants to other charities/services who provide core care for families during 'end of life treatment').

As if this isn't enough Harry's story that inspired so many people globally and Georgie wanted to continue with Harry's message. As such she has pulled together a Schools social enterprise which she delivers in schools and now takes Harry's story into Young Offenders Institutes to help rehabilitate young offenders.

Georgie said " I am really overwhelmed and shocked to be nominated, never mind to win the overall award. For me its not about awards but making a difference to all people who still have hope. Cancer is a difficult journey and its only through working as a team we can make change. I dedicate my award to all those families living in hope and of course my amazing son who is still my hero'.
